TEACHING ABOUT RELIGION

The Board of Education believes that the topic of religion is one of the controversial subjects in any public school, and should be handled with a great deal of understanding. Religion is not to be taught from the denominational standpoint. Moral and ethical standards are taught by teaching truthfulness, citizenship, respect for others, fair play, democratic way of life, and human understanding.

The Board recognizes the importance of teaching high moral and ethical values by precept and example in the public schools. Students will be encouraged by the staff to develop high moral and ethical values under the leadership of their parents and religious leaders.

Adopted: November 9, 1987

Revised: September 12, 2011